SHALL HECHLER BE VINDICATED?
Mr. H. C. Hechler, former treasurer of Henrico county, is asking the voters for vindication. The Times-Dispatch is quite willing that he should have it, but not at the expense of good and efficient government in Henrico. The people of the county have had quite enough of shortages and irregularities in the treasurer's office without electing to that office a man who was but recently removed by Judge Scott for malfeasance.

When ex-Treasurer Brauer went out of office, his accounts were found to be in a muddled condition and he had to make good a balance due the county. When ex-Treasurer Todd died, his accounts were found to be in even a worse condition, and there was a considerable shortage, a part of which, we are informed, has not yet been paid to the county.

Mr. Hechler was appointed by Judge Scott on March 10, 1906, to succeed Mr. Todd, and when his accounts were examined in October following, another shortage was discovered, to say nothing of irregularities which caused great confusion, we learn, in the county's financial system. In his order of removal, Judge Scott said: "When called upon by the Board of Supervisors of the county to explain this shortage, his (Hechler's) only defense was that he had used the money for his private purposes to avoid paying discount, and did not think it was wrong, as he had a credit of $3,000 in the State Bank of Virginia and could replace the money at any time. This action on the part of respondent (Hechler) is a clear violation of our statute, as set forth in sections 861, 866, 3717, Virginia Code, 1887, and was malfeasance in office, and the court is required by law to perform the painful duty of removing said respondent from office."

"I have been urged by the able and learned counsel for respondent to solve every doubt in his favor. I have done this, and would that I could see my way clear to doubt."

"Respondent has acted in the manner he has with his eyes open. When he was appointed treasurer by this court it was not then known that Todd was short in his accounts. This court, inasmuch as respondent was his appointee, and was a deputy in the office of Todd, as soon as the shortage of Todd was known, called it to the attention of the grand jury and had a thorough examination into the affairs of the treasurer's office, and in its charge to the said jury told them that they must investigate the acts of deputy; that the deceased could not be reached, and that the use of public funds by a treasurer for his private purposes was malfeasance in office (as provided by section 821)."

It was not charged that Mr. Hechler was guilty of criminal intent, and The Times-Dispatch does not so charge or believe, and the shortage in his accounts was made good. But the fact remains that in spite of the misconduct of his predecessors, of which Mr. Hechler was well aware, in spite of the warning of the court, Mr. Hechler used the funds of the county for his private purposes and was guilty of a violation of the law which he was sworn to uphold. We have no disposition to pursue Mr. Hechler. This writer does not even know him by sight. Nor have we any candidate for the treasurer's office. But we have a profound interest in good government, and we submit Judge Scott's order of dismissal as sufficient proof in itself that Mr. Hechler is not the man to be treasurer of Henrico. Judge Scott appointed him and Judge Scott removed him, and the people of the county should not override the order of the court. To re-elect Mr. Hechler would be not only a vindication, but an approval of his official administration and of his manner of conducting the office. It would also be putting a premium upon carelessness, inefficiency and irregularities in all public offices. And that is the only interest that The Times-Dispatch has in Mr. Hechler's candidacy. We desire to see constant improvement and progress in the public service, and so do all good citizens of Henrico county. But it would be a poor incentive to public officials for the people to "vindicate" and approve an ex-official by re-electing him to an office which he conducted so loosely as to compel the judge who appointed him to dismiss him from service. Let the voters of the county have a serious reckoning with themselves and ponder whether or not it will be in the interest of good and efficient government for them to set such an example. It is not Mr. Hechler or any man, but the public welfare, which the voters must consider.

RIVER TONNAGE.
If the question of "present tonnage" had been taken into consideration as the prime and moving factor in the earlier days of the United States, it is exceedingly improbable that capital would have been induced to invest in the construction of railroads. But the builders of railroads looked to the country it was designed to pierce with the rails, to its possibilities of mine, of field, of forest and of climate, and procured their charter, subscribed their capital stock, overcame engineering difficulties, and constructed their lines through territory which then was a wilderness, but to-day is teeming with commercial and industrial life.

There was no tonnage across the Alleghenies, save in the Conestoga wagon, when the first railway was projected in Pennsylvania. There was no tonnage on the plains, save the tonnage that was carried in the prairie schooner, when the project of a great transcontinental line was suggested as a possibility, and like conditions existed when the Baltimore and Ohio, the Erie, the New York Central, the Georgia Midland, the Illinois Central, and the other great arteries were projected. But trade and commerce, mining and agriculture, the church, the school-house, the newspaper and an intelligent and pushing citizenship followed the construction of the railway—and vast tonnage also followed in its wake.

To-day the tonnage of the country is so enormous in its proportions, and increasing at rates that stagger belief, that the magnates of the trunk systems frankly admit their inability to handle the freight offered to them for transportation.

That excess of freight must find a highway at once continuous, safe, efficient and reliable—and that highway can be found only in the waterway, with the test of merit being in its capability to bear tonnage if adequately improved, not in its capability to bear tonnage in its unimproved condition, nor in the fact that, being unimproved, the tonnage is light. Tonnage follows the highways of trade and commerce. The history of every improved waterway demonstrates the fact. If existing tonnage had been the test in the early days, no railroads would have been constructed. But the railroads were constructed, and tonnage has followed so enormously that the one solution of the question to-day is admittedly to be found only in the improved waterway and harbor.

This article was prepared for The Times-Dispatch by an outsider, but we cheerfully give it space in the editorial columns as a concise expression of our own view. It is most important to the commerce of the country to keep the waterways in navigable condition, and few cities are more interested in the subject than Richmond. James River is one of our greatest blessings, and we should keep up the agitation for its improvement until it is so straightened and deepened as to give us the most direct ship channel to Chesapeake Bay.

SCHWAB AN OPTIMIST.

Charles M. Schwab sees most in the situation to encourage optimism in the steel trade and stimulate the hope that the demand for steel and the output of steel will go on expanding, increasing and measuring our prosperity, with a possibility of 50,000,000 tons needed a few years hence instead of the 25,000,000 tons consumed this year.

"My optimism," says Mr. Schwab, "is based on the fact that during the past thirty years in which I have been identified with the steel and iron business there has been a consistent and constant increase almost year by year, and it is not going to stop now. Bear in mind that the more steel there is in use the more there is required. It takes 2,000,000 tons of rails each year to replace the worn-out rails. Increased railroad facilities which the normal growth of the country requires means increased demand for rails. The extension of our railroads is obviously necessary, and the increase in our steel-producing capacity follows as a matter of course."

Mr. Carnegie used to say that steel was either a prince or a pauper. Mr. Schwab seems to think that he will be a prince forever. We hope he is right.

AGAIN THE LAWLESS NEGRO.

A negro desperado in Georgia has just succeeded in killing three officers of the law.
He began by shooting Sheriff Tyler, of Grady county, who attempted to arrest him. A posse, headed by Marshal Cardell, of Cairo, pursued him and surrounded him in a cabin. He was ordered to surrender, and responded with a shot. This was followed by a second shot which killed the marshal. When they saw their leader fall, the members of the posse ran to his assistance. This gave the negro an opportunity, and, firing as he ran, he made his escape. Another posse, headed by Deputy Sheriff Hinnelcutt, of Thomas, took up the pursuit, and came in sight of him in the afternoon. The negro immediately opened fire and killed Deputy Hinnelcutt.

The Isolation of Genius
By LORD BYRON.
He who ascends to mountain-tops shall find
The loftiest peaks most wrapt in clouds and snow;
He who surpasses or subdues mankind,
Must look down on the hate of those below.
Though high above the sun of glory glow,
And far beneath the earth and ocean spread,
Round him are the icy rocks, and loudly blow
Contenting tempests on his tempests tread.
And thus reward the toll which to those summits led.

WOMAN'S INNOCENT WAY.
When Paris first kissed Helen she, no doubt,
Or viewed him with an air that he considered very haughty;
We may be sure that at the start
The lady began by saying no word of art.
And blamed him for the wicked part
He came endeavoring to play;
But when he turned to leave her there she
Probably replied in a very demure way:
Enough to say that she would never consent
—and then consented.

When Antony began to smile on Egypt's queenly daughter
She doubtless told him he was vile and said that she had brought her
We may suppose that proud disdain
Was in her look and in her mien
When he began by saying no word of art.
But when at last the warrior queen, his disappointment showing,
She sweetly said: "My supposition: 'Why must you, dear, be going?'"

When Henry's arm is lightly placed around
The waist of Kitty
She chides him for his lack of taste and
scorns his plea for pity;
But when he begins to say the boy
Her hand in his is softly laid,
And he discovers to his joy
That he has won the gentle maid.
Since Eve began by saying no her daughters
Have been seeking
How often they may safely show dissent
before agreeing.

MERELY JOKING.
A Juvenile Fable.
"I have ever nature-faked," said the Rev. William J. Long, the gifted nature writer in Stamford, "I have done so unconsciously. My knowledge, not my veracity, has been my fault."
"You know," resumed Mr. Long, smiling,
"any one may nature fake through ignorance."
Thus:
"I was addressing some Stamford
school chaps on the subject of bees, and, turning to a bright-looking little chap, I said:
"With what part of the body does a bee buzz, Jacob?"
"Jacob answered confidently but ignorantly, 'I have never nature-faked,' and I said:
"It's buzzin', sir," he said."—Boston Post.

Food for Thought.
Parishoner: "That was an able sermon of yours, doctor. I have no doubt, but it was a little too deep for me. I found it hard to digest."
The Rev. Dr. Fourtly: "I ought to have been a school teacher, sayin' no her daughters have been seeking How often they may safely show dissent before agreeing."

In Fashion.
Unconventional Stranger: "What are you going to be when you grow up?"
Johnny: "Investigated, I s'pose."—New York Sun.

Time Is Money.
She: "Dearest, will you be mine?"
He: "Oh, how sudden! Do give me a little time to think."
She: "I cannot wait another minute. I have a 35-an-hour cab at the door."—London Opinion.

Why We Hate Them.
"Pa, why do we hate governors?"
"Gracious child, you're dull. We have to have governors ride horses in the procession, and when they ride horses they are called governors. I have a 35-an-hour cab at the door."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Reason Why.
Mr. Foggy London: "What causes the delightfully clear weather you have in New York?"
Mr. Man Hattani: "Skyscrapers, dear boy."—Life.

Counts Rapidly.
Hicks: "Did you ever succeed in persuading the other members of the class to count
ten before she speaks?"
Wicks: "Yes, but she is a very rapid counter."—Somerville Journal.

His Income.
The teacher of a Sunday-school class in Wilkesbarre once put the following question to his scholars:
"What did Moses do for a living while he was with Jethro?"
There was a long silence, during which the other members of the class took occasion to "size up" the newcomer. The latter, however, was undismayed. After due reflection he answered:
"Please, ma'am, he married one of Jethro's daughters."—Harper's Weekly.

becoming common to hear people declare

Heard and Seen
In Public Places
THEATRES.

The twenty-sixth edition of Charles H. Yale's "Devil's Auction" was presented at the Academy last night. The "Auction," in the history of the stage, has almost a phenomenal record. People never seem to tire of it, and people who saw it when they were boys, and have seen it a dozen times since, again witnessed it last night.
The "Auction" this season is fresh from Mr. Yale's big scenic studio in Philadelphia. As the spectacle depends much upon its scenic embellishment, this fact is worthy of notice. While every year Mr. Yale makes the announcement that the "Auction" has been rewritten, he is far too wise a theatrical manager to really carry out this threat. He knows full well that his public would resent the taking of too many liberties with the lines with which every one has become so familiar. And therefore he does the next best thing, which is to introduce as many new scenes as he can into various "intermissions" which occur during the progress of the piece. This season he has secured the Les Freres Clemens, European musical grotesques, who present one of the most novel acts of its kind ever seen here. This act is really "different" and is one of the featured in big time. They received round after round of applause last night.
All of the old familiar characters are in capable hands. George M. Topack makes a robust Toby, and keeps the audience guessing whether he is going to be a German or an Irish comedian. There are strong indications that he will lapse into both at various stages in the course of the piece. He will compare favorably with a long line of "Tobys" who have gone before him. Miss Violet Hilson is a vivacious Janet, the milkmaid, and adds a great deal to the success of the production. Her "Jesse James" song was one of the best musical numbers in the play. Mr. H. H. H. can take her place with any of the Janets.
Mr. Moses Wise, a Richmond boy, who is a brother of Mr. Leo Wise, manager of the Academy, is with the production, being at the head of the business staff. He has long been connected with the Yale enterprise and was warmly greeted by many of his old friends here last night.

Goes Up in Smoke.
Fifty dollars' worth of shells are used every week in the play, "A Child of the Regiment," at the Bijou this week. The Gatling gun alone uses more than half that amount. Figuring this out, the company's forty weeks' season spends $2,000 in shells. There is a fascination in gunpowder to many people, and that is why there is so much used in some of the Blaney shows.

"Kidnapped for Revenge."
In the Blaney show, "Kidnapped for Revenge," which comes to the Bijou next week, there is but one pistol shot fired. There are enough scenic accessories to carry the thrills along, however, without the smell of gunpowder. This is the second season of this play, but the first in Richmond. Besides the sensational and there are a number of specialties introduced, including several songs and dances, which add much to the success of the play.

Barrel Race To-Night.
Besides the exhilarating sport at the Idlewood rink, the new moving pictures and the music tend to entertain the large crowds who go out every evening. To-night an amusing barrel race will be given between experts. Learners are taught by those in charge of the floor, and many ladies and gentlemen are taking advantage of the opportunity of becoming expert skaters.

SALVATION ARMY IN NEED OF FUNDS
Local Branch Doing Good Work and Needs Assistance.
The officers of the Salvation Army are planning special efforts to be made locally in connection with their Harvest Festival celebration on September 22d. Through this undertaking they hope to enlist both sympathy and financial assistance.

The ex-prisoners' aid, the care of deserving girls and the relief of a number of families has left the treasury empty, and the local clergy of the Salvation Army is in need of funds.
